CHINESE BABIES

When a Chinese baby is a month old it is given a name. Its head is also shaved for the first time, a ceremony which is called "mumefut," and is made the occasion of great rejoicing in rich families. All members of the family are present in their holiday attire, and the baby to be shaved is clad in a light red gar-

The hair that is removed is wrapped in paper and carefully preserved. After the barber has performed his task an aged man—who is hired for this purpose and receives a small compen-sation—lays his hands upon the head of the little one and exclaims: "Long may you live!" Those present thereupon sit down to a great feast, of which even the little hero of the day reeast, of which even the little hero of the day receives his share in the shape of a tiny piece of the rice-flour cake which was donated by his grand-mother. All who have made presents (of clothing, bracelets, &c.,) to the child since its birth are invited to this repast. Before the child is put into the new bed, however, the father consults a calendar and selects a lucky day. The almanac also informs him which things should be removed from the presence of the child. In one instance it must not touch or see objects, made of bamboo during a certain time; in another instance articles of copper and iron are proscribed. Objects which are denoted as harmful by the calendar are either concealed or taken away.

The effect of this will not be ob-served on a clear night, but whenever the air is misty, or contains dust or fog in any quantity, the skylight is expected to throw the light high up in the air and to cause an intense luminosi overhead. This skylight will contain glass overhead. This skyight will contain glass of different colors, which will make a general effect of a softer and more genial light than the ordinary electric carbon affords. To crown the whole, a powerful searchlight, placed on the ground in front of the statue, will be turned full on the face.

From the Chicago Herald.

Where do the waters of Lake Michigan come from? is an old question, and it is a question as old as the artesian wells. Where do their waters come from? Col. Foster, an eminent civil engineer, for many years in charge of government interest on the lake, was fond of talking on the first subject.

"Every drop of those waters," he was often heard to declare, "came from the Rocky mountains." His theory was that they were brought here subterraneously, but he never, to our knowledge, marked out the course of the subterraneous stream. terraneous stream.

He announced this as his conviction long before—indeed, he died before—the sinking of artesian wells in Chicago and the consequent discovery of the now undoubted fact. William B. Ogden held the same view, and William B. Ogden held the same view, and used at times to make himself very interesting in expatiating upon it. With him, as well as with Col. Foster, it was no more than a theory, but he adhered to it firmly.

Mr. Cregier, who is scientific before he is a politician, is wont to talk approvingly of the theory in a manner to convince any man.

The phenomenon is the running out of this lake through the others of the easterly chain and over Niagara Falls of an incalculable quantity of water, and this continually every minute does it get its replenishment? From the Rocky mountains.

Through rents and crevices, down into caverns at the roots of these mountains, pour ever the waters from melting snow. Four thousand feet they sink to strike a gravity incline that levels with their floor under Chicago.

Under this city and elsewhere on the west side of Lake Michigan—this is the proved theory, theory as good as proved—the snow-covered Rocky mountains are constantly sending their waters to supply flowage and evaporation that is ever going forward in the watery expanse.

Some German Spelling.

From the London Telegraph.
In the German empire no department of life scapes the vigilant eye of government departments. One of the latest instances of this be nevolent supervision is a circular which bas just been issued by the colonial office at Berlin. From this document we learn that the foreign office, at the request of the colonial council, appointed a committee of experts, and presided over by Dr. Herzog, secretary of the colonies, to consider the spelling of geographical names in the German protectorates. The deliberations of the committee have resulted in a code of rules, which start from the principle that all spelling is to be as nearly as possible phonetic, and to reproduce the pronunciation of the natives, not of Europeans. Then there are detailed directions for the use of particular vowels and consonants, of accents and hyphens. A promise is given that a gazetteer will be complied in compliance with the directions above given. A standing committee is to superintend the work and issue from time to time lists of approved spellings, which will be enforced on officials, and which it is hoped map makers, journalists and authors will follow. From this document we learn that the foreign

A Photograph of Lightning. From the London Globe.

Mr. Cowper Ranyard has obtained from Mr.

Dunn of Newcastle-on-Tyne what seems to be a photograph of "ball lightning"—the first ever taken. The luminous blotch on the plate has a striking resemblance to the disk of marigold or sunflower. It is, in fact, a plain circle of light with a border of rays like small flames. The plate is further speckled and atreaked with smaller luminosities. It was obtained just before the fireball vanished, and judging from its likeness to some figures of electrical discharges we should say it really is a picture of the ball.
